Highlights

-TOPIX Net Total Index gained 3.2% Trade deal finalized Market participants looking through 2025 earnings for now

Cumulative performance	Fund	Index
1M	4.2%	3.2%
YTD	9.4%	6.9%

Market Review

The TOPIX NTR gained +3%. It was helped by a -4% slid of the JPY vs the USD and -2% vs EUR. The performance by capitalisation were broadly similar but small caps that did better. Value style came back in favour with a +5% gain compared to Growth up slightly, +1%. The divergence of performance by sector remained elevated. All sectors gained except for Communication Services, -2%, due to gaming companies' almost double-digit retreat – they had gained over +25% during June quarter. Apart from gains of the tiny Energy sector +9%, Financials and Industrials performed best, rising +6% each. Within Consumer Discretionary, +2%, carmakers gained +8%. The unchanged Information Technology and Consumer Staples underperformed. A trade deal with the US administration was announced removing the tariff overhang. As expected, the Bank of Japan left its policy rate unchanged.

Fund Review

The fund beat the benchmark by over 1 point. All the overperformance came from stock selection while the sector allocation was mostly neutral. The underweight position in Communication Services helped while the overweight in Real Estate detracted. Stock selection was noticeably good within Real Estate – helped by REITs in particular –, and materially negative only in Industrials. The largest portfolio contributors were Mizuho FG, +12%, Fuji Electric, +14%, and the cardboard maker Rengo, +12%. The largest detractors were domestic companies: GMO Payment Gate, -9%, Nichirei, -3%, and Keisei Electric Railways, -6%. FANUC re-entered the portfolio at c.1% – a small overweight – as demand for robots seems to have bottomed out while it trades at close to a decade low valuation. Furthermore, in the Factory Automation space, Keyence also was topped up by c.1.5 point to 2.3% on lowest valuation since pre-COVID – albeit not cheap – with seemingly solid fundamentals such as double-digit sales growth in the US. Japan Post Bank position was also increased by c.+1pt to 2%, as the bank appears to benefit from the current rate environment. Domestic companies LY Corp and Matsukiyococokara were trimmed by c.-1pt each on reduced upside potential as their share price gained over a third in 2025. The fund's largest but neutral exposure is to Industrials, with a 26% weight. Real Estate remains the fund's largest overweight with +6pts despite the reduced exposure by over 1pt on some profit taking for several holdings. The only significant underweight is Communication Services, -5pts, which was increased by 1pt as LY Corp was trimmed. Cash is at maintenance level. The ESG profile is broadly unchanged and continues to outperform the benchmark, particularly in terms of carbon emission intensity. TOPIX valuations are at 14.6x 12-month forward P/E, 1.44x P/B and 2.5% dividend yield. The Fund trades at 14.5x, 1.38x and 2.8% respectively.

Outlook

The market has gained +7% so far in 2025, ignoring the 4% JPY gain vs the US dollar and the reduced earnings estimate for 2025 due to a stronger JPY and the impact of US tariffs. Instead, market participants seem to look at 2026 earnings for which earnings estimates have been mostly unaffected by the above-mentioned factors and expected to grow by double-digit for that matter. Despite the removal of US tariffs overhang, it is unclear if the Bank of Japan will have the opportunity to raise its policy rate as the domestic inflation will rapidly return toward 2% in the coming months and a higher likelihood of the US Federal Reserve FOMC entering a cut cycle. The fund focuses on domestic companies and reasonably priced free cash flow generators.
