Market Review

August brought broad-based equity gains, with the MSCI ACWI up +2.4% in local currency and leadership widening beyond tech. In the US, the Dow Jones (+3.4%) outperformed the S&P 500 (+2.6%) and Nasdaq (+1.6%), while in Europe, the Stoxx 600 advanced +1.6%. Italian equities delivered one of the strongest performances, with the FTSE MIB up +3.6% and the Mid Cap index +3.4%, driven by strength in financials and industrials. Sovereign spreads reached 15-year lows, reinforcing Italy's position as a relative outperformer within Europe.

Fund Review

The two best performers in August were Fincantieri and Avio, both strongly positioned to benefit from NATO's projected increase in defense spending. NATO forecasts a 9% rise in military expenditure in 2025, with Italy among the biggest contributors, and a 15% jump in equipment investments. This environment supports companies supplying defense and aerospace solutions. Avio is an Italian aerospace group specializing in space propulsion systems (rockets and boosters) and tactical missile propulsion. It plays a key role in Europe's Vega C and Ariane 6 launch programs while also supplying solid rocket motors for defense. Recent successes – such as the Vega C VV27 mission in July 2025, which placed five satellites into orbit, and the successful ASTER-30 missile test – have strengthened its credibility. The company is well placed to benefit from the sharp increase in missile demand, as Europe's MBDA consortium is doubling production in 2025. Fincantieri, the world's largest shipbuilder outside Asia, produces cruise ships, naval vessels, and submarines. Its naval business is particularly aligned with NATO priorities. In H1 2025, revenues grew 24% YoY, with a robust order backlog above €40 billion. The group is also positioned to gain from the U.S. "Shipbuilding Renaissance", which allocates over $29 billion to strengthen American naval and marine capacity. With improved debt guidance, expanding margins, and geopolitical drivers, Fincantieri is expected to continue delivering growth. Together, Avio and Fincantieri represent strategic Italian champions likely to keep benefiting from the defense and space investment cycle.

Outlook

Despite Trump's tariff threats, Fed policy debates, and geopolitics, the Goldilocks regime has persisted, supported by strong US earnings and dovish Fed expectations. This backdrop may continue but risks loom: weaker US growth, persistent inflation, or rate shocks. A further risk is investor overconfidence, with valuations stretched and markets pricing in a September rate cut as certain. Any hawkish surprise or weak data could spark a correction. In Europe, Italian assets remain well supported, with sovereign spreads at multi-year lows and fiscal guidance anchoring investor confidence, reinforcing a constructive outlook for the market.
