Market Review

October was another strong month for markets, with financial assets buoyed by the US-China trade truce, robust economic data, and solid corporate earnings. These positives outweighed worries over private credit and a potential AI bubble, as a narrow group of tech stocks continued to drive the equity rally. Global equities advanced, led by Japan's standout performance following the election of pro-stimulus Prime Minister Sanae Takaichi. Emerging markets advanced, and US technology stocks continued to deliver strong results. In fixed income, sovereign bonds yields decreased, HY spreads slightly widened on fears of potential pocket of credit weakness. Gold hit a new record and the dollar strengthened broadly.

Fund Review

The funds achieved positive returns in October, primarily driven by the equity allocations. U.S. equities were the strongest contributors, followed by gains in Global Semiconductor, Emerging Market and Japanese equity. Diversification strategies added further value, aided by the strong appreciation of gold. Fixed Income also contributed positively, with credit exposure serving as the main driver. During the month, equity exposure rose across all regions, reflecting both market gains and the Manager's decision to further overweight equities amid resilient market performance supported by secular tailwinds from Al innovation. In Fixed Income, the Manager continued to capitalize on opportunities in the primary credit market.

Outlook

Fundamental support for equities remains solid. The Manager expects earnings in 2025 to remain strong, primarily driven by the U.S. Looking to 2026, the Manager anticipates growth will become more widespread across sectors and while Europe will recover. The Fixed Income market presents an appealing setup, offering opportunities to benefit from yield carry without taking on excessive risks related to interest rate fluctuations or credit quality. Uncertainties on the inflation outlook and Fed's policy are balanced by downside risks to growth. Until there is greater clarity on inflation dynamics, economic growth trajectories, and fiscal policy direction, patience and selectivity remain key.
