Important information

As indicated in the "Fund facts" section, a new strategy has been implemented within the Fund pursuant to a change of Fund manager. As a result, where historical information on the Fund may be misleading, it is, in the Management Company's opinion, more relevant to provide the investors with information on the strategy. In such case, this will be appropriately specified in this marketing document. Unless otherwise specified, data contained in this document are provided as at 2025.11.30.

Investment objective

The objective of this Sub-fund is to provide its investors with a long-term appreciation of their capital, principally by means of a focused portfolio of investments in high quality common stocks of small and medium companies of issuers of the United States of America. At least two thirds of the Sub-fund's assets are invested at all times in equities and similar transferable securities issued by companies of medium or small stock market capitalization and having their registered office in the United States or operating predominantly in the United States. The MSCI US Small Cap Growth Net Return Index is used, in the appropriate currency of a given Share Class of the Sub-fund, for comparison only, including for performance comparison. The Fund is actively managed, and the Fund's manager's discretionary powers are not constrained by the index.

Market Review

Markets took a breather in November after six consecutive months of positive returns that kicked off in early April. As investors began to question the staying power of the AI theme, many of the stocks that had benefitted in months prior saw performance reverse course. The clearest representation of this weakness in smid caps has been in the Tech, Utilities, and Industrials sectors, the latter of which encompasses much of the electrification theme represented in the Portfolio. Additionally, a better than expected employment report (lagged from September given the US government shutdown) called into question whether or not the Fed would be able to further ease rates in December, pressuring the risk-on dynamic driving markets. Interestingly, Biotech was a rare bright spot amidst the sell off, benefitting from better regulatory visibility and a pick up in M&A activity.

Fund Review

Amidst this the Fund underperformed the benchmark primary driven by weaker stock selection in Industrials and, to a lesser extent, Financials and Energy. Offsetting this partially was stronger stock selection in Utilities. Sector relative positioning was also a modest headwind to relative performance, with much of the benefit stemming from the overweight to Utilities and underweight to Health Care (and primarily Biotech). At the stock level, the top three contributors to relative performance included Adaptive Biotechnologies, Natera, and Carvana, while bottom relative detractors included Bloom Energy, BWX Technologies, and Cameco. Rather than give a play-by-play of each company, given the dynamics this month, it's worth taking it up a level. The biggest observation was simply that the AI infrastructure theme began to draw more scrutiny from investors in November prompted by some rhetoric across management teams primarily in large caps. Later in the month the blowout report from NVIDIA helped to assuage the worst of these concerns and put the market on more stable footing. The clearest reflection of this in our own holdings can be observed in the fact our bottom three detractors this month were our top three contributors last month, and among our top contributors over the past several months.

Outlook

A core belief of ours is that change is the only constant. As such, we've designed a time-tested process around that core belief, seeking to understand change through the lens of 4 primary forces—1) competitive advantage, 2) strategy/management shifts 3) thematic forces and 4) cyclical business conditions—that impact earnings growth, which we believe is the ultimate driver of stock price performance. This process has served us well for more than 25 years and will continue to guide us in the future irrespective of the prevailing headlines of the day.
