Highlights

-The Global high yield market spread and yield to worst was unchanged month-over-month holdings at 292bps and 6.46%, respectively. For most developed markets, monetary policy decisions appear on hold for now. The fiscal policy impulse remains supportive of the global economy, and the current government shutdown in the U.S. is seen as temporary by investors. Geopolitical risk remains heightened. Potential AI-disruption risk hit software and business services companies during the month.

Market Review

Comments from President Trump at Davos alleviated market concerns that the US would consider force to take sovereignty over Greenland. His appointment of Kevin Warsh at the end of the month as the next Federal Reserve Chairman, however, given his perceived monetary hawkishness, sent shockwaves through markets as the dollar spiked, metal prices crashed and risk assets sold off. The ICE BofA Global High Yield Index gained 0.70% in January, BB-rated bonds returned 0.68% compared against a return of 0.68% for Bs and 0.88% for CCCs. By geography, hedged to USD, the ICE BofA U.S. High Yield, Euro High Yield and Sterling High Yield Indices posted gains of 0.48%, 0.86% and 1.31% in January, respectively. The top performing sectors in the Global High Yield Index in January were Energy, Real Estate and Telecommunications sectors. Bottom performers were Technology & Electronics and Media.

Fund Review

The Fund returned 1.17% net of fees (prelim) in January, outperforming the ICE BofA Global High Yield Constrained index by 47bps. In January, the largest contributors relative performance were the Fund's holdings across the B-rated spectrum. However, these positive effects were partially offset by the negative effect generated by the Fund's holdings in the CCC2-rated holdings which detracted from relative performance. From a sector perspective, during the month of January the Fund's holdings in the Technology & Electronics, Retail, Media and Leisure sectors outperformed those of the benchmark and contributed to relative performance. However, these positive effects were partially offset by the negative effects generated by the Fund's holdings in the Energy sector, which lagged those of the index.

Outlook

Given lofty valuations across most asset classes bouts of volatility are to be expected but we believe high yield markets will prove relatively resilient during risk-off periods and ultimately generate solid mid- to high-single digit returns over the course of the year. In our view, the fund is well positioned from a sector and ratings perspective to potentially outperform the market. We expect that a majority of returns in 2026 will come from income, as a result, the strategy's carry advantage could be an important tailwind for relative performance.
