Market Review

Geopolitics dominated January's headlines amid tensions involving Venezuela, Iran, and Greenland, while the Federal Reserve remained in focus, reviving debate around central bank independence. Despite heightened uncertainty and volatile global developments, risk assets performed strongly, supported by resilient global economic data. All regional equity markets posted positive returns, led by Emerging Markets, followed by Japan and Europe, with international markets outperforming the U.S. U.S. equities recorded modest gains, marked by market "broadening". U.S. Treasury yields edged higher, credit spreads remained stable, gold performed strongly despite a late-month sell-off, and the U.S. dollar weakened against major currencies.

Fund Review

The fund delivered a positive return in January, with all asset classes contributing positively to performance and equity allocation acting as the main driver. Exposure to Emerging Market and global semiconductors equities was the largest contributor, followed by Eurozone and Japanese equities, while US equity was the only slight detractor. Bond positions also added value despite slightly rising interest rates, as credit spreads remained stable. Diversification strategies further enhanced performance, mainly through strong gains in gold. During the month, the manager increased equity exposure by reducing U.S. equities and reallocating toward Emerging Market and Japanese equities to improve diversification and capture relative growth opportunities.

Outlook

In 2026, the manager anticipates growth will become more widespread across sectors and while Europe will recover. The Fixed Income market presents an appealing setup, offering opportunities to benefit from yield carry without taking on excessive risks related to interest rate fluctuations or credit quality. Uncertainties on the inflation outlook and Fed's policy are balanced by downside risks to growth. Until there is greater clarity on inflation dynamics, economic growth trajectories, and fiscal policy direction, patience and selectivity remain key.
