Highlights

- The Global high yield market's spread and yield-to-worst increased by 20 bps and 9 bps, ending the month of February at 312bps and 6.55%, respectively. • Financial markets, particularly in the US, were rattled by the threat that artificial intelligence could pose to a wide range of sectors. Software companies sold off the most aggressively, but other sectors such as insurance and other financial services were also impacted.

Market Review

• Anthropic's rollout of expanded AI capabilities through Claude Cowork disrupted a range of sectors, with software, SaaS, and IT services most affected. Investors are increasingly concerned that AI could replace many of these business models over the long term. In the nearer term, these enhanced AI capabilities may also pressure pricing power across these sectors, prompting investors to downgrade earnings expectations broadly. This rollout of expanded AI capabilities affected Europe less than the U.S., and high yield bonds proved more resilient than other credit markets, such as leveraged loans and private credit, which have greater exposure to technology sectors. Additionally, rising geopolitical tensions, the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling on tariffs, and declining U.S. Treasury yields contributed to a risk-off tone in leveraged credit markets.

Fund Review

Market Review contin • The ICE BofA Global High Yield Index gained 0.33% in February, with BB-rated bonds returning 0.56% compared against a return of 0.11% for Bs and -0.73% for CCCs. • By geography, hedged to USD, the ICE BofA U.S. High Yield, Euro High Yield and Sterling High Yield Indices posted gains in February of 0.11%, 0.45% and 0.62%, respectively. • The top performing sectors in the ICE BofA Global High Yield Index in February were Energy, Real Estate and Banking sectors. Bottom performers were Technology & Electronics, Insurance and Financial Services. Fund Review: • The Fund returned 0.06% net of fees (preliminary) in February, lagging the ICE BofA Global High Yield Constrained Index by 27bps. • In February, attribution by ratings shows the largest detractors from relative performance were the Fund's holdings across the B-rated spectrum, as well as holdings rated CCC2. However, these negative effects were partially offset by the positive effects produced by the Fund's BB1-rated and CCC2-rated holdings, which contributed to relative performance. • From a sector perspective, during the month of February, the Fund's holdings in the Retail, Media, Energy and Consumer Goods sectors lagged those of the benchmark and detracted from relative performance. However, these positive effects were partially offset by the positive effects produced by the Fund's holdings in the Real Estate and Leisure sectors, which outperformed those of the index.

Outlook

• The decision by the U.S. and Israel to attack Iran on the final day of the month has dramatically increased uncertainty and volatility. The worst-case scenarios could include a prolonged period of instability in the region, leading to structurally elevated energy prices and impaired supply chains. The inflationary impact of this event could have a wide-ranging impact on interest rates, consumer behavior, and economic growth in much the same way markets experienced in 2022. Conversely, a quick de-escalation or a regime change in Iran could be seen as a deflationary event that has a material positive impact on risk assets. At this point, it is impossible to predict the outcome of this conflict, but a degree of caution is required.
