Highlights

- Global equities continued to make new highs in February, finishing the month +1% higher • Over the month we saw a continued outperformance of RoW equities vs the US • Gold was 11% higher in February, as heightened geopolitical tensions buoyed the precious metal

Cumulative performance	Fund
1M	2.3%
YTD	6.5%

Market Review

Global equity markets continued their ascent over the month climbing 1%. February saw the continuation of the outperformance of international markets relative to the US. The “Mag-7” was a notable laggard over the month falling almost 7% compared to a 1% decline for the S&P500. Global government bonds delivered robust performance over the month, climbing 1.7% in February. However, we did see a widening of credit spreads in the US, with HY OAS spreads c. 40bps wider. The US dollar strengthened vs DM currencies, with the DXY rising by approximately 0.6%.

Fund Review

The strategy delivered positive performance in February, bolstered by allocations to Rest of World (RoW) equities and gold. Following a period of robust gains, exposure to gold and Japanese equities was moderated. This was a tactical rebalancing to manage overweight positioning while maintaining a constructive long-term outlook on both asset classes. Part of the resulting proceeds was redeployed into two new US positions, serving to narrow the portfolio’s existing underweight to the region. February was characterised by a notable rotation away from the technology sector, with software-focused constituents underperforming. Heightened concerns regarding AI-driven disruption triggered a sharp dispersion in returns; companies with business models perceived to be at risk over the longer term were sold down, despite maintaining resilient near-term fundamentals. While this trend acted as a headwind for specific holdings, the portfolio’s broader diversification served to mitigate the impact on overall returns.

Outlook

Against a backdrop of elevated uncertainty, we continue to favour risk assets, with the current policy environment likely to be a tailwind over the medium term. Financial conditions remain loose and progress continues to be made on inflation and the labour market, moderating the key risks surrounding the economy. We certainly expect volatility to be a feature; however, our primary focus remains on ensuring the strategy is well-diversified for a broad range of market environments.
